“ Barry was more than our son's best soccer coach-he was mentor and life skills coach, imparting many important values the his team. He taught excellent technical skills and could often be seen demonstrating these technique playing with the team in practices.But more than that Barry valued sportsmanship, fairness, team building and cooperation.We all got "2 for the price of one" with Cindy and Barry. Cindy had the great gift of hospitality and she welcomed each boy and each parent to the team. She exercised her considerable admin skills to keep the team on schedule, and managed many team details at home and on the road. Her friendly management style was a winning combination coupled with Barry's many talents. They were a great example to boys and parents alike. Barry will live on in our memory and we thank God that our paths intersected-our lives are richer having known Barry. Blessings,

“ To me, Barry Darwent was always "Coach." As a new member of his soccer team in 8th grade, Coach Darwent welcomed me to the team, though I needed some real training. He taught me the importance of practice, requiring us and planning on us to be there every Thursday and Sunday. Coach Darwent challenged us as players, both when we were playing in tough competition in tournaments and by giving us special challenges when we would play local opponents. I have a lot of appreciation for the effort Coach Darwent put into developing me as a player, and still remind people of the importance of his coaching on my high school career.

“ Barry Darwent was the coach of our son’s classic soccer league while he was in high school. When people think of coaches they think of the person that organizes practice, coaches games and keeps the players focused on their team. Barry coached to help young men through a difficult phase of their life. He had unlimited time to discuss the problems of the day with his team members. They listened to him because he shared his own experiences both the “wins and losses” of life so they could learn from him.

We are grateful to Barry and Cindy for being there for our son when he needed guidance. Even if he gave the same advice as a parent, the advice seemed more meaningful.

Thank you for being a good role model, Barry. You made a difference.
